ENGLISH PAPER-I

Question No. 1 to 15

Comprehension (Read the passage and answer the questions given below)

Global warming the phenomenon of increasing average air temperatures near the surface of the earth over the past one or two centuries. Climate Scientists have since the mid twentieth century gathered detailed observations of various weather phenomena such as temperatures, precipitations and storms and of related influences on climate such as ocean currents and the atmosphere's chemical composition. These data indicate that Earth's climate has changed over almost every conceivable timescale since the beginning of geologic time and that the influence of human activities since at least the beginning of the Industrial revolution has been deeply woven into the very fabric of climate change.

Giving voice to a growing conviction of most of the scientific community the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change(IPCC) was formed by the World Meteorological Organisation (WMO) and the United Nations Environment Programme(UNEP) . In 2013 the IPCC reported that the interval between 1880 and 2012 saw an increase in global average surface temperature of approximately 0.9 degree centigrade. The increase is closer to 1.1 degree centigrade when measured relative to the pre industrial (i.e. 1750-1800) mean temperature. The IPCC stated that most of the warming observed over the second half of the twentieth century could be attributed to human activities. It predicted that by the end of the 21st century the global mean surface temperature would increase by 0.3 degree to 5.4 degree centigrade relative to the 1986-2005 average. The predicted rise in temperature was based on a range of possible scenarios that accounted for future green house gas emissions and mitigation measures and on uncertainties in the model projections. Some of the main uncertainties include the precise role of feedback processes and the impacts of industrial pollutants known as aerosols which may offset some warming.

Many climate scientists agree that significant societal, economic and ecological damage would result if global average temperature rose by more than 2 degree centigrade in such a short time. Such damage would include increased extinction of many plant and animal species, shifts in patterns of agriculture and rising sea levels. The IPCC reported that the global average sea level rose by some 19-21 cm between 1901 and 2010 and that sea levels rose faster in the second half of 20th century than in the first half. It also predicted again depending upon a wide range of scenerios, that by the end of the 21st century the global average sea level could rise by another 29 to 95 cm relative to the 1986-2005 average and that a rise of well over 1 metre(3 feet) could not be ruled out.
